CAPT. JOSELYN'S STATEMENT.

Capt. Joselyn, who is one of the clerks in Gov. Ireland's office, makes the following interesting statement of his encounter with the bold highwayman who attacked him and seven at other prominent citizens whom he succeeded in robbing upon the streets of Austin Wednesday night:

I had been taking supper at the residence of Mr. Norval Wilson, at the extreme western limit of the city, and was returning on foot, when, about 8 o'clock, as I reached the iron bridge over Shoal creek, I perceived a man on horseback close behind me. I took the foot-way and he rode his horse slowly over the bridge, keeping opposite to me, which excited my suspicion.

As I reached the end of the foot-way, he wheeled his horse around in front of me, presenting his pistol, and saying: "Your money or your life." I was holding in my left hand an issue of the Franklin Square Library, and in my right hand my ordinary walking stick, a good-sized genuine Madawaska stick, with heavy iron joints. Seeing him within my reach, no sooner had he spoken than I struck him suddenly over the arm; turning the pistol aside I immediately repeated the blow, aiming at his head, whereupon he turned his horse and rode quickly back over the bridge to the other side. I was congratulating myself on my fortunate escape and had walked on a few steps, when I heard and saw him returning over the bridge and I then ran, leaving the street and trying to reach the creek and get under the bridge. The way was rough and I stumbled and fell, rolling over on my back. As I lay there he came up again, presenting his pistol and saying: "He would shoot me if I did not give up my money." I told him I was an old man, seventy-one years old, and had not much longer to live anyhow, and he might shoot away. He looked at me a moment and then slowly rode by me down into the creek, and I saw him no more. I had only about $13 in one pocket and a good silver watch and chain in another. He got neither.

The boy told him if he should do like that he would lose his life.

"I don't want you to lose your son, but let me take at one."

He was handed a STATESMAN and a read, reading the first word.

Then he handed the paper and requested the delivery boy to fit him, which he did the next morning.

He requested the last article, read over again. This done. After he had heard it all he remarked: "Oh, h—l! The STATESMAN has not got it wrong at all." It was all right.

Then he asked the boy why those nice people never had him if they could.

He met Mr. C. E. Pendleton near the graded school building about 10 o'clock, and called to him half." Mr. Pendleton halted. He is the famous revolver at his head, before he could close up the coat for his jewelry and money, he drove around the corner and his gallant highwayman and his galloped away. It is reported he went to a store in the western part town and forced the merchant out with his money, but the route could not be traced, many definite. It is also reported that he met from the country in the eastern part of the city and robbed him of the city and took the price paid for it. Sold by L. N. Brunswick.
